Max is an Associate in the firm's Litigation and Dispute Resolution Group. He is developing a general commercial litigation practice.

Max recently completed his JD at the University of Toronto. Before law school, Max studied political science at Queen's University.

Max has a diverse employment background with experience in sales, banking, researching, and sailing. He also has demonstrated an interest in public service, working with the Syrian refugee community at Queen's and researching for the David Asper Centre Prisoners' Rights working group at law school. Max loves playing and watching sports in his free time, namely golf, basketball, hockey, and baseball. He also loves to travel, going on a 4-month backpacking trip after completing his undergraduate degree and spending 4 months in London, England, while on exchange during law school. He also loves trying new restaurants in Toronto, but you can usually catch him going to Kensington Market for some pho and churros.
